To Whom It May Concern,

I have worked with Abrar Ebrahim from the spring of 2014-present at Al-Bayan Bilingual School in Kuwait. Abrar is a teacher in our high school Languages Department. She currently teaches our Grade 9 and 10 Honor English courses, a grade 10 English class, and our Drama course.

Abrar is an amazing young educator who has quickly developed into a master teacher. When she offered to teach Drama but realized that most of her own experience was strictly in English, she took it upon herself to learn more about drama and joined a theater group here in Kuwait to gain behind-the-scenes experience and then also took it upon herself to attend a professional development course in Drama in London over the summer. All throughout her first semester last year, she single-handedly organized a performance of the play "Antigone" here at our school, by her theater troupe. She did everything from organize and implement the ticket sales to meeting with our lighting and sound technician. She has worked to translate and produce some of her Drama classes productions into Arabic. She has served as a mentor to other new teachers and serves as the faculty advisor for our National Honors Society.

Abrar is constantly looking for new challenges and experiences to enhance her learning and growth as a teacher. Over this past summer, after learning that as a school we would be shifting to more Standards Based practices, she did a tremendous amount of reading on the topic and designed rubrics that have been incorporated into our reporting process across the high school. In observing her classroom, I have watched her effortlessly use differentiation and student choice in her lessons. She keeps expectations for her students, and for herself, high. She's often one of the first teachers in the building and frequently among the last to leave. Her work ethic is commendable.

Abrar is a creative, passionate, consummate professional and a dedicated teacher. Moreover, she loves to learn and is so excited about pursuing a masters degree. She will bring a refreshing enthusiasm and undeniable energy with her. I highly recommend her.

Please feel free to contact me with any questions.

Kind regards,

Laura Divine
